U. S. Registered Mails go to every post office in the world. Letters and parcels may be registered at any post office or any money-order station, and by rural carriers on their routes. Letters will be registered by letter carriers in the residential districts of cities.

Registered mail is delivered through a U. S. post office only to the addressee, without request for extra charge, a return receipt signed by him, addressee, or his agent. For registered mail delivered in a foreign country the sender receives without charge a return receipt. The sender may also, if the words "Return Receipt Demanded" appear on the envelope or wrapper.
